

Juneteenth

Juneteenth is a holiday. It is about how we stopped slavery. It is a day where we remember how badly we treated black people in the past. The reason it is important is because black people are people, not servants. We are all equal. We treated black people badly. Think about if you were treated like that. What would that feel like? We should not treat black people badly just because of the color of their skin ever again. Nobody should be treated like an unequal just because of skin color. White people and black people are friends, and if there was still slavery, they wouldn't have time to play or time to be friends. Juneteenth helps us to remember not to be mean to other people just because of differences in the way we look.
